Oprah Winfrey

Oprah Winfrey grew up poor. She learned to read very young. She began her public speaking career at the age of three. At the age of 17, she put these two skills together when she got a job as a news reader on a small radio station. After going to Tennessee State University, she began her career in television.

Today, Oprah—as her many fans call her—is a national talk-show host, a TV producer, and a publisher. With other people, she owns a cable TV channel that targets a female audience. She was the first African American woman to become a billionaire. Clearly, hers is a financial success story. However, she says that her focus was “never for one minute” money. She says that she would do the same work even if she didn’t receive any money for it. According to Oprah, that’s how “you know you are doing the right thing—because it doesn’t feel like work.”

Oprah is making a difference in people’s lives. She has worked to end child abuse. She started a book club on her TV program to encourage more people to read for pleasure. And her organization gives $100,000 to individual people who are using their lives to improve other people’s lives.
